As I think about it. I am my father's son more than I have realized. He was not verbal, but he taught me just the same.

Gerald D. Watkins, At Rest

By Gerald E. Watkins

It was a stifling hot day when we laid him to rest. Hotter even under the canopy than in the sun when we gathered around the gravesite. It was well into the 100s. His service was at the church of Christ where he served as Deacon for many years. There were children of friends long gone. His co-workers were represented from a career that spanned 40 years. There was an honor guard from the department where he retired. His closest relatives still living were there on his and on his "in-law" side. The church where he was a member and Deacon was well-represented. Two of his four children were there. One preceded him in death and one has been long estranged.

Dad was well-respected on the job. He was a police officer and rose to the rank of lieutenant. He was a professional and had a resume that was full of schools he had attended including the FBI National Academy. He was fair with those he supervised. I was often told that he was missed as a supervisor. In a day were police officers often have problems with alcohol Dad NEVER drank. It is almost axiomatic that cops cuss. Not Dad! I never heard him utter more than the mildest of euphemisms.

It was in Dad's home life where he had more problems than you might expect. His kids were challenging. This is not an area that eventually became peaceful and comfortable, it was an area where he learned to accept and absorb the blows which kept coming and go forward. Perhaps this is greatest legacy to me. The one thing that I will learn from him that is his greatest gift to me.

I will long be assimilating the lessons I have learned from the life of my dad. This little article may never be finished. These are thoughts and they continue.

I am back from laying my father to rest. I thank you for your indulgence in my absence. I thank you for your
